

About the Seminar:

Sustainable development and energy security are two of the greatest global challenges of our time. As the world grapples with rising energy demands, climate change, dwindling fossil fuel reserves, and geopolitical instability, there is a growing need for innovative and sustainable solutions that balance environmental, economic, and social goals. This seminar on "Sustainable Development and Energy Security" aims to understand the complex relationship between sustainable development and the long-term availability of energy resources. Adopting an interdisciplinary approach, the program will draw insights from environmental science, engineering, economics, and public policy to explore how collaborative efforts can effectively address these challenges. Sustainable development, as outlined by the United Nations, emphasizes on meeting the needs of the present without compromising the future. Similarly, energy security focuses on the uninterrupted supply of affordable energy. Achieving these objectives together requires a strategic shift from conventional fossil fuel-based systems towards clean and renewable energy sources such as solar, wind, hydro, and bio-energy.
